THINGS YOU
NEED TO KNOW

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

We all know a marathon is 26.2 miles, and some of us may know this is the 122nd Boston Marathon. But do you know how many people are entered to run the race, or how many spectators flock to the course between Hopkinton and Boylston Street, or just how many bananas get passed out to those runners willing to do that trek? (Hint: a lot.) Read more inside on page 4 and visit metro.boston.us for more marathon coverage.

WELCOME TO
METRO BOSTONTRUMP BASHES COMEY
AHEAD OF BOOK RELEASE

President Donald Trump hurled a new set of insults on James Comey on Sunday, challenging accusations the former FBI director makes in a tell-all book that is due for release this week, and insisting that he never pressed Comey to be loyal to him. "Slippery James Comey, a man who always ends up badly and out of whack (he is not smart!), will go down as the WORST FBI Director in history, by far!" Trump wrote in one of five Twitter posts aimed directly at the fired FBI chief. The renewed attacks by Trump came as ABC News was set to air an interview with Comey at on Sunday night in which he would discuss his book, "A Higher Loyalty." Trump fired Comey last May, setting off a firestorm, as the Federal Bureau of Investigation was probing possible connections between Trump's 2016 presidential campaign and Russia's meddling in the American elections. Russia has denied interfering in the election and Trump has denied any collusion or improper activity. Reuters and other news outlets have obtained copies of Comey's book before its formal release this week. In it, Comey wrote that Trump, in a private meeting, pressed the then-FBI director for his loyalty.

STARBUCKS BOSS OFFERS
APOLOGY FOR ARRESTS

Starbucks Chief Executive Kevin Johnson apologized late on Saturday for the arrests of two black men at a Philadelphia coffee shop last week, which sparked accusations of racial profiling. Promising to make everything right, Johnson promised a thorough investigation of the incident caught on video by a patron Thursday and shared widely online. The men were accused of trespassing but have said they were waiting for a friend before ordering. "The video shot by customers is very hard to watch and the actions in it are not representative of our Starbucks mission and values," Johnson said in a statement. He added, "The basis for the call to the Philadelphia police department was wrong." Philadelphia's police commissioner on Saturday defended the arrest, saying his officers had to act after Starbucks employees told them the pair were trespassing. Video of Thursday's incident showed other patrons telling officers the pair was doing nothing wrong and appeared to have been targeted merely because of their race. Police Commissioner Richard Ross said he knew the incident had prompted a lot of concern, but said his officers "did absolutely nothing wrong."

SLOW-MOVING STORMS
HEAD TOWARD EAST COAST

Deadly slow-moving storms generating record snowfall and low temperatures in the Midwest moved eastward on Sunday, leaving stranded airline travelers and thousands without power. In Michigan, where snowfall was expected to reach 18 inches in some areas, about 325,000 homes and businesses were without power, most of them in the southeast of the state. In the Detroit metro area, more than 310,000 customers of DTE Energy lost power on Sunday because of ice storms, DTE spokeswoman Je'well Pearson said. Icy roads were also posing a challenge for utility trucks, which could prolong some of the outages, she said. Tornado watches were in effect over the Carolinas, but no tornadoes had been reported by early Sunday afternoon, said National Weather Service meteorologist Brian Hurley. The storms stretched from the Gulf Coast to the Midwest and were moving into the Northeast and New England. A total of more than 150 flights had also been canceled on Sunday at Chicago's O'Hare International, Boston's Logan International, Milwaukee's General Mitchell International and Newark Liberty International airport in New Jersey, Flightaware said.

FORMER FIRST LADY
BARBARA BUSH AILING

Barbara Bush, the wife of former U.S. President George H.W. Bush, is in "failing health" and has decided to no longer seek medical treatment, the office of the ex-president said in a statement from Houston on Sunday. The former first lady, who is also the mother of former President George W. Bush, "will instead focus on comfort care," the statement said. She is 92 years old. The brief statement did not indicate the nature of Bush's illness but said that she had had a series of recent hospitalizations. CNN reported that Bush was suffering from chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) and congestive heart failure. A Bush family spokesman said she was being cared for at her home. He did not provide information on the nature of her illness. "She is surrounded by a family she adores and appreciates the many kind messages and especially the prayers she is receiving," the statement added. As first lady from 1989 until 1993, Bush was a popular figure known for her sometimes blunt talk and self-deprecating wit. Her husband, the 41st president, is 93 years old. Her son, the 43rd president, is 71. She is the only woman to see her husband and son sworn in as U.S. president.

2018 Boston Marathon by the numbers

A lot goes into the Boston Marathon, from the runners on the course to the number of bananas passed out by volunteers.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

The Boston Marathon isn't actually the biggest 26.2-mile race in the U.S., but it's definitely one of the most iconic and notable marathons in the nation — and certainly still a large-scale production.

Boston has the oldest marathon in the world, according to the Boston Athletic Association, and one of the most prestigious road races, thanks to its intense course and infamous qualifying times.

The Boston Athletic Association limited the race's field size to 30,000 entrants — representing 99 countries — and that meant that 5,062 qualified applicants were rejected this year, according to WalletHub. The route has seen some non-qualified runners as well: 50-plus crashers manage to run the entire Boston Marathon each year.

Beyond the course, the marathon has a huge economic impact on the area, to the tune of an estimated $201 million. Many runners use the race to raise money, and $297 million has been raised in total for Boston Marathon charities since 1986.

Russia's Putin predicts global 'chaos' if West hits Syria again

The U.S. is expected to announce new economic sanctions related to Syria on Monday.

Russian President Vladimir Putin warned on Sunday that further Western attacks on Syria would bring chaos to world affairs, as Washington prepared to increase pressure on Russia with new economic sanctions. In a telephone conversation with his Iranian counterpart Hassan Rouhani, Putin and Rouhani agreed that the Western strikes had damaged the chances of achieving a political resolution in the seven-year Syria conflict, according to a Kremlin statement.

"Vladimir Putin, in particular, stressed that if such actions committed in violation of the U.N.

Charter continue, then it will inevitably lead to chaos in international relations," the Kremlin statement said.

Meanwhile, U.S. ambassador to the United Nations Nikki Haley told CBS' "Face the Nation" program that the United States would announce new economic sanctions on Monday aimed at companies "that were dealing with equipment" related to Syrian President Bashar Assad's alleged chemical weapons use.

On Saturday, the United States, France and Britain launched 105 missiles targeting what the Pentagon said were three chemical weapons facilities in Syria in retaliation for a suspected poison gas attack in Douma on April 7.

The Western countries blame Assad for the Douma attack that killed dozens of people. The Syrian government and its ally Russia have denied involvement in any such attack.

The bombings marked the biggest intervention by Western countries against Assad and ally Russia but the United States, France and Britain have said the missile strikes were limited to Syria's chemical weapons capabilities and not aimed at toppling Assad or intervening in the civil war.

Responding to Haley's remarks about the plans for new sanctions, Evgeny Serebrennikov, deputy head of the defense committee of Russia's upper house of parliament, said Moscow was ready for the penalties, according to RIA news agency.

"They are hard for us, but will do more damage to the USA and Europe," RIA quoted Serebrennikov as saying.

In Damascus, Syria's deputy foreign minister, Faisal Mekdad, met inspectors from the global chemical weapons watchdog OPCW for about three hours in the presence of Russian officers and a senior Syrian security official.

Didn't Trump know that "Mission Accomplished" is a famous punchline from the endless war in Iraq? GETTY IMAGES

TRUMP'S AMERICA

MISSION CREEP IN THE WHITE HOUSE

Analysis

ELLIS HENICAN

Metro columnist Ellis Henican is the bestselling author of a dozen books including "Trumpitude: The Secret Confessions of Donald's Brain." Join Ellis on Twitter @henican.

TTrump has doubled down on his clueless use of "Mission Accomplished."

To declare "Mission Accomplished," don't you need to know what the mission is? That key step is still noticeably AWOL from Donald Trump's victory dance on Syria.

We're pulling our troops out ... maybe.

We're "establishing a strong deterrent against the production, spread and use of chemical weapons" ... maybe.

We're "prepared to sustain this response" ... maybe.

We're ... oh, never mind!

Which of these various possible missions have we now accomplished? Could be any. Could be none. And, oh, the sour odor of those two boastful words!

Didn't Trump know that "Mission Accomplished" is a famous punchline from the endless war in Iraq, emblazoned on a banner aboard the USS Abraham Lincoln, where George W. Bush announced on May 1, 2003, that "major combat operations" were done — one month after they'd started and 15 years too soon. Fifteen years and counting. Using those words now can be explained by an ignorance of history, an utter lack of caring or both. Pending further evidence, both is an excellent guess.

And then on Sunday morning, amid a flurry of tweets about James

Comey, Loretta Lynch, Bill Clinton, Andrew McCabe, Hillary Clinton, Michael Cohen, the FBI and the Fake News Media (a typical Sunday morning, in other words), Trump doubled down on his clueless use of "Mission Accomplished."

"It is such a great Military term, it should be brought back," the tweet-happy president typed. "Use often!"

Whatever the mission might or might not be.

For Trump, it's more than one sloppy phrase, of course. It's a way of approaching the world with no concern for facts, principles, insight or consistency. A constant gush of venom and ego. The fired FBI boss Comey, whose book arrives on Tuesday, is target No. 1 this time. He is a "Slimeball," "Slippery," "out of whack," "not smart" and "WORST FBI director in history, by far!" — and on his way to "jail...jail." I don't have room here to quote the president's other careless character assassinations. Just know this much: They accomplish nothing at all.

William Shatner tells us why 'Star Trek II' is so important

But what about all those remakes?

JENNIFER LOGUE
jennifer.logue@metro.us

Shatner, star of stage and screen, sat down with Metro to chat about his legacy ahead of a tour to promote "Star Trek II." You'll be surprised by some of his quips!

We asked him why the second film gets all the fuss and not the first. "It was only the result of people changing their minds for various reasons, that they decided to do 'Star Trek II.' They gave the project to the television department, hoping they could do it more cheaply," Shatner reveals.

The business move ended up paying off in other ways as well, with the TV department basing the entire film off of a "Star Trek" episode with a villain named Khan.

"It reverted to the concepts that made 'Star Trek' [the series] popular — with character, good plot and all those things that the show had done well," he says. "The movie was very popular, successful with the critics and the fans. It launched all the other 'Star Trek' movies."

And working once again with Leonard Nimoy (who famously played Spock)? "We had a combined front. Things we thought were important to change — we hung out together to make those changes," he says.

"There had been a pilot for the show made with another actor playing Captain Kirk," Shatner shares, on the original, "but it didn't get picked up. The concept was intriguing enough for another pilot with a different cast."

At the time, Shatner had no idea that "Star Trek" would become so iconic.

"It was just another show," he says. "Moderately successful for three years and they canceled it. That was the end of it as far as everyone else was concerned. And then 'Star Wars' broke upon the American public and Paramount said, 'What do we got that can approximate the popularity of 'Star Wars'? They remembered six or seven years previously, they had done something called 'Star Trek.' They revamped it. Then what came out was the first movie and everyone was deeply disappointed. We were about to quit, and then came 'Star Trek II.'"

Flash forward to today, and "Star Trek" has been relaunched many times, both in movie theaters and on television. So what does Shatner think of the remakes? Turns out, he's a big fan of J.J. Abrams.

"I think it's great."

As far as these days, Shatner still has a lot on his plate.

Despite being close to ninety, Shatner shows no signs of slowing down.

A second Sam Adams Tap Room is coming to Boston

The brewery hopes to open the new location in 2019.

Following the success of the recently opened Sam Adams Tap Room in Jamaica Plain, the brewery has plans to open a second location in Boston.

The company announced Friday that it is in the final stages of negotiations over a new Tap Room, to be located in the Hub's Downtown neighborhood. According to a statement, the bar-room is tentatively planned to set up shop at 60 State St., which is close to landmarks like the Old State House, Government Center and Faneuil Hall.

While there are only a few details available about the project, the brewery hopes to open the new Sam Adams Tap Room during the summer of 2019, as long as all the proper permits are secured and construction is completed on time.

"When I started Sam Adams back in 1984, I hit the streets of Boston literally going door-to-door to introduce bartenders to a new beer called Boston Lager," brewer and founder Jim Koch said in a statement. "Many of those first bars and restaurants were in and around the Old State House. Government Center and Faneuil Hall. With our new tap room, we remain committed to brewing innovative beers for our fellow Bostonians and attract even more beer enthusiasts to our hometown of Boston."

The new Tap Room should add even more local flavor to the popular Faneuil Hall area, which already features a ton of fan-favorite, local hotspots.

"We're thrilled to welcome the new Sam Adams Tap Room to the neighborhood," Faneuil Hall Merchants Association president Linda DeMarco said in a statement. "For decades, Sam Adams has been a champion for small business growth and job creation across the city and a committed New England neighbor, supporting local and regional charities and organizations."

Online porn can save relationships

Your partner's habit is tearing you apart... but does it have to?

KARL SAINT LUCY
letters@metro.us

Picture it: You've spent the whole day taking care of your clients, your boss and your coworkers. All you want to do when you eventually get home is rip off your clothes, rinse off your hellish commute and jump your partner's bones. Lo and behold, when you walk in — zoink! There's your partner on the sofa with a hand down their pants and the other slamming their laptop shut.

Betrayal! Horror! Disgust! They've taken their own hands to their own private parts with the help of online pornography! How could they? What did I do wrong? Is this the end for us?

Dear reader, it's probably not. In fact, you might be better for it.

Your bodies are different

Even if you've become "one flesh through holy matrimony" (haha) your partner's body still belongs to him or her. As such, your better half will have preferences you will never understand, like that disgusting brand of mayonnaise they love. But you both like sandwiches, right? And you can agree to disagree on a certain condiment but still grab sammies together, right? Buy your brand and their brand, make lunch, and you'll see that you can enjoy differently-lubricated slices of bread together in peace.

P.S.: The sandwiches mentioned above are sex. You know that.

Porn takes the pressure off you both

Tell me there hasn't been one time when you were exhausted and didn't feel like jiggling your horny partner's junk. I dare you. Props if you've got forearms of steel, but you're not lacking if you don't! We ask ourselves to be therapists, secretaries, fashion consultants, and unendingly ravenous sluts for our partners. Isn't it nice to outsource some of those services to others? What's so different about orgasms, especially given that neither their favorite porn stars nor their favorite hand

Watching porn together is a great opportunity to synch kinks. istock is going to give them (or you) an STD?

You might learn something

Many of us watch porn all by ourselves. What would happen if we began to use porn as an opportunity to share our whole selves with our partners? After all, porn stars have given us a jump-start by sharing their naughty bits and tricks. Maybe we'll see a fun new position to try, or a kink we didn't know we had. Remember when sex was about discovery and fun?

It's not always fun to learn that our sexual needs and gifts don't exactly complement our partner's. But when we lean into our differences, we give ourselves permission to be imperfect matches, and we lay the groundwork for intimacy and exploration that's rooted in the humanity we share with our better halves.

Next time you catch your partner with a hand down their pants, sit down next to them to see if you can get off to it, too. Maybe you'll love it, maybe you'll hate it — either way, you might find you're closer for it.

JOBS

Signs your boss doesn't have your back

You might be trapped in a toxic tango. ALL IMAGES ISTOCK

There's a reason you aren't getting promoted, but it might not be your fault.

KARL SAINT LUCY
letters@metro.us

You've just finished your quarterly check-in, and something's off. You've maintained a good rapport with your boss; you've met — nay, exceeded — your KPIs; you've played well with others, even Janice from Accounting... so why do you still feel that your job is going nowhere? It could be that you've come down with a terminal case of lazy-manager-itis. But how could that be? Where were the signs? Maybe we'll never know. For next time, though, here are some red flags to watch out for.

They're not interested in new ideas

You saw that your company was throwing away time and resources, and you made a solid business case for increasing efficiency that didn't come at a cost. You went into the pitch meeting already celebrating — your boss was going to be so proud! But ... they turned it down. Of course, you can't always know what's on your boss's plate. But when good ideas are thrown out for seemingly no good reason, it's often because they require buy-in above your manager's pay grade. Unfortunately, some managers aren't willing to rock the boat, even for good ideas, and you're left in the lurch. How can you succeed when your manager propagates a "stick-in-the-mud" culture?

Their feedback isn't related to business goals

Everyone should have the right to a respectful and annoyance-free workplace, and working in tandem with your manager along those lines is important. At the end of the day, though, you're both there to do business. If the feedback you're getting from your boss consistently has more to do with accommodating their personal work style or compulsions than meeting measurable business goals, they're not properly contextualizing your relationship. You'll have a hard time getting aligned on your career roadmap with a manager who can't put work first.

Here's when you know it's time for your two-week notice.

They see you in the same role indefinitely Culture Amp, a leading data-driven employee-feedback platform, reports that employee retention is driven by whether employees are engaged, see a future for themselves within a company, and have access to ongoing learning and development. One way of assessing your manager's commitment to your continued growth is to ask, "What's your dream version of my role?" If they answer that they see you doing more of the same indefinitely, they're not seeing the big picture, and they're probably not the best collaborator for achieving your long-term goals.

Your first job is to advocate for yourself and your career — your second is to find colleagues who support your goals. Organizations are messy and often fraught with politics, and though your manager may not be able to make everything happen for you, you deserve a relationship that's founded on mutual respect. If your manager won't go to bat for you, it might be time to make a change.

Monday's Marathon could be a monster day for several American runners.

JAMES TOSCANO
sports@metro.us

Officially, the first day of spring came on March 20, 2018. For some sports fans, The Masters might be the weekend where it really starts to set in.

But for many Bostonians and those taking part in the Boston Marathon in one way or another, it's Marathon Monday that really gives closure to the cold, dark winter and brings in what feels like another fresh start... and a lot of fun.

Of course, Monday's forecast for the 122nd Boston Marathon isn't exactly screaming "spring." But hey, those who have trained around here have dealt with much worse.

Patriots' Day is a special celebration in Boston, as the runners take off from Lexington and make the 26.2-mile journey to the finish line on Boylston Street. In fact, there will be more than 7,100 runners traveling in from 98 countries outside the United States, according to the Boston Athletic Association.

Most of those in attendance along the route are there to cheer on friends or a family member.

But before your mom, dad, college roommate, or crazy uncle crosses that finish line, there are some elite runners you'll want to at least get a glimpse of as they sprint (yes, sprint) by.

And this year, there are some Americans that have a serious shot at breaking that finish line tape and getting to wear the olive wreath.

First, the elite women, who start at 9:32 a.m. and finish before the men.

Returning for what very well could be her last Boston Marathon is Marblehead, Massachusetts, native Shalane Flanagan. The 36-year-old Flanagan took home first place in the New York City Marathon last November with a time of 2:26:53, becoming the first American woman in 40 years to win the race. That win compelled her to give the elusive Boston Marathon another try after a disappointing ninth-place finish in 2015. The Olympics kept her out of the 2016 race and a back injury caused her to drop out last year.

Other notable American women to watch out for are Jordan Hasay and Desi Linden. Hasay, 26, finished third in Boston last year with a time of 2:23:00, a record time for a marathon debut. Linden, 34, is the only one of these three who has finished Boston in second place (2011). She finished in fourth place behind Hasay in 2017.

It's been 35 years since an American

2:22

Shalane Flanagan registered a time of 2:22:02 at the 2014 Boston Marathon, which is the fastest time by an American woman in the race's history.

woman won the Boston Marathon. Will this be the year that streak ends?

Not if reigning Boston Marathon champion Edna Kiplagat, 38, of Kenya can help it. She will return to defend her crown but did finish in fourth place behind Flanagan in New York City. Buzunesh Deba, 30, of Ethiopia has the Boston Marathon course record (2:19:59), when she won in 2014.

Over on the men's side, another American looks to take home first place: Galen Rupp. Rupp, who turns 32 in May, finished in second place (2:09:58), 21 seconds behind the winner in his Boston Marathon debut, last year all while dealing with a foot injury. This year, though, he comes in healthy and on a roll. He won the Chicago Marathon in October with a PR time of 2:09:20.

Looking to hold him off once again is the defending champion, Geoffrey Kirui. The 35-year-old Kenyan pulled away from Rupp in the later stages of last year's race. He won again at the 2017 World Championships in Athletics, in London.

Celtics grab Game 1 over Bucks in thriller

The Cs outscore Milwaukee 14-8 in OT to go up early in the series.

MATT BURKE
matt.burke@metro.us

NBA pundits may have written off the Celtics with Kyrie Irving on the shelf, but the Celtics showed in their 113-107 OT victory over the Bucks Sunday at TD Garden that a lengthy playoff run in Boston may still be in the cards.

Gutty performances by Terry Rozier, Jayson Tatum, Al Horford, Marcus Morris and Jaylen Brown proved to be the difference in the C's Game 1 win. Tatum's highlight reel reverse layup while fading away from the basketball put the Celtics up 108-105 with 1:22 left in the extra session, and the rookie also came up with a monster rebound and block in the final minutes of OT. Rozier's rebound off a missed Giannis Antetokounmpo free throw sealed the game for Boston.

Rozier also came up with the Celtics' signature play of the playoffs thus far as he made what initially looked like a game-winner in the final seconds of regulation. Rozier milked the clock for what initially looked like a little bit too long, but — clearly knowing what he was doing — he crossed up Milwaukee guard Eric Bledsoe with a gorgeous step-back and drained a 3-pointer with just a half second left on the clock.

Improbably, the Bucks' Khriston Middleton hit a 36-foot shot in response out of a time out — getting the ball out of his fingertips just before the horn sounded — to force overtime.

In OT, the Celtics outscored the Bucks, 14-8.

Al Horford led the way scoring-wise for the Celtics as he pumped in a team-high 24 points. The majority of those points came from the charity stripe as Horford hit 13 of 14 at the line. Rozier had 23 points, Brown totaled 21 and Tatum registered 19. Morris had 21 off the bench.

Horford also collected 12 rebounds and Tatum was also a beast on the boards with 10.

The Bucks were very much a two-man show on offense throughout the afternoon as Antetokounmpo had 35 and Middleton posted 31.

Game 2 of the series is Tuesday at the Garden (8 p.m., TNT).

Bruins continue to dominate

The Bruins averaged 3.26 goals per game in regular season, good for sixth in the NHL, but right now it looks like no team can touch them in the lamp-lighting department.

The Bs hit up the Maple Leafs for five goals in their 5-1 Game 1 victory last Thursday and then outdid themselves on Saturday night by scoring seven goals in a 7-3 rout of a win. As of Sunday afternoon, the Bruins had the top four players in NHL postseason points thus far with David Pastrnak already having nine points to his name and with Brad Marchand (6), Patrice Bergeron (5) and Torey Krug (5) not far behind.

Already, the Bruins are clearly in the Maple Leafs' heads going into

Game 3 in Toronto on Monday (7 p.m., NESN, NBCSN). Toronto's fans are in despair, too, as here was the headline on their team blog. "Tip of the Tower" on Sunday: "Okay, NOW it's time to panic."

Despite an outing Saturday night in which he was pulled with 7:47 left in the first period, the Leafs will start Frederik Andersen in goal Monday night at Air Canada Centre. The Bruins have been able to take advantage of Toronto's weak blue line so far, particularly Pastrnak who is looking like one of the best players in hockey right now.

Of note, the Bruins are expecting center Riley Nash to return to the lineup in Game 3.
